

Karin Stephenson, PhD

Director, Nuclear Research and Education Support

Nuclear Operations & Facilities

McMaster University

Dr. Karin Stephenson is the Director, Nuclear Research and Education Support for Nuclear Operations & Facilities at McMaster University. Prior to this role, Karin was the Director of Research Platforms Support in the Office of the Vice -President, Research at McMaster University, where nuclear is one of the University's largest research platforms. Karin has 20+ years of experience in nuclear research, radiochemistry, and radiopharmaceuticals. Before joining McMaster University, she was the Director of Discovery at the Centre for Probe Development and Commercialization, where she led research and discovery of new radiochemistry and radiopharmaceuticals with applications in oncology and neurology research.

Karin graduated with her PhD in Chemistry from McMaster University and completed post-doctoral fellowships in Radiology at the University of Pennsylvania and at the PET Centre at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health/University of Toronto. She has published numerous papers and patents, has been awarded for her research sits on the executive boards for the Canadian Nuclear Isotope Council (CNIC), Nuclear Innovation Institute (NII) and Canadian Medical Isotope Ecosystem (CMIE).